Some references are added in the wiki, among them originated from BBC News and New York Times. As not my 'focus' within EN-WP, I hope this is a useful little start from Switzerland-related Child Labor, which is why I only allow to mention as well the so-called ChamineGerKinder (chimney sweeping ones) and enthrallable work p.e. in spinning mills in 19th-century Switzerland, hoping a more engaged Wikipedia enthusiast can contribute Thx and kindly greetings, Roland zh 21:32, 15 November 2014 (UTC) Hi, 2% of the article devoted to Switzerland is too much. Accurate contemporary child labour information is difficult to obtain due to disagreements between data sources on what makes up child labour. In some countries, government policies contribute to these problems. For example, the overall extent of child labour in China is unclear due to the government categorizing child labour data as highly secret. [1] China enacted regulations to prevent child labour; yet it is reported that the practice of child labour is a persistent problem within China, generally in agricultural and low-skill service sectors as well as small workshops and manufacturing enterprises. Just a note to be careful. This article is in British English and uses the spelling labour consistently in managing text; it's fine. But there are two important exceptions. First, you never change the spelling of a direct quote. If the quote labor says, you say labor, otherwise you paraphrase and remove the quotation marks. Second, before I fixed it, there was a footnote with a hyperlink to a website from the Smithsonian Institute. The Smithsonian's URL used Labor, but the hyperlink used labor, so it's broken. My guess is someone just went through and at one point did a worldwide replacement. Please don't do this. It's good to scan through time to time and make sure the article keeps uk spelling, but you have to do it in a way that takes into account the exceptions. -- Trovatore (speaks) 21:02, 22 April 2015 (UTC) Another exception: Proper names. For example, Labor Day (when referring to the U.S. Holiday) and national child labour committee. -- Trovatore (talking) 23:24, 22 April 2015 (UTC) South Sudan I have corrected the Child Labour Convention part of the article. It said South Sudan had not yet ratified the Convention, but it is not a party to the convention according to . Other articles have sources such as South South Sudan is the 195th participant (but the un.org page 194). Nor am I sure if Somalia did or did not validate the Convention: not says it only did locally. As far as I can say, that means that, officially, Somalia has not ratified the Convention. It's a pretty quiet page. So if I update my Sandbox, I'll continue to check the current article to make sure no major changes have been made that will significantly change my editing process. My five substantial changes - Edit the entire article for grammar issues using Grammar to help maintain a consistency and just clear the article. -Created a new section called Child Labour Laws by Country -Rearrange the article colonial realm, Switzerland, and the Soviet Union in my new section included. -I also edited those three sections and determined what information I should add to each one. -Colonial Empires Division -Add new information about child labour in the time listed. What is identified as a colonial realm? -Switzerland new information about child labour at, such as when the current law was passed and how it happened. -The Soviet Union -Adds information about child labour that occurred before 1922. I too, a division for Latin America and India. -I will add information about child labour in the past, when current labour laws have been passed and why, and how child labour is now. -This is where a majority of my new material will go. Set the |reply= or |ans= parameter to no to reactivate your request. Over the years, there have been many initiatives to try to eliminate the use of child labour in all facets of production. Some of these initiatives succeeded and others failed. One initiative in particular has been found to fail when looking at a third party. This information is not found on the Child Labour Wikipedia article and the knowledge of the failed initiative must be known to the readers of the Child Labour Wikipedia article. The current laws and initiatives section on the wikipedia article focuses primarily on international laws and some initiatives that encompass all facets of child labour and have been enforced in many countries. While the Wikipedia article does have a section where it breaks down Child Labour incidents, there's no question of Pakistan or the soccer ball industry. By adding a new section called Failed Foul Ball Initiative under the title Child Labour Laws and Initiatives in the Child Labour Wikipedia article, the reader will gain a better understanding of the tried and failed attempt of the International Labour Organisation to use children in the in Pakistan. Stick to sources! Paine 22:08, 14 April 2016 (UTC) Cheers -- cyberbot II talk to my owner: Online 21:39, 27 February 2016 (UTC) Potential positives from children working I created this section following the closure of Wikipedia: Articles for deletion/Child work. I personally don't think it was wise to merge the article here because it's a well-developed article and that one was an essay, but the process is process. I did the best I can with the information (it seemed to talk primarily about positives from child labour, so I mentioned the section accordingly). I didn't check the sources to verify the information and it still reads a lot like an essay in my mind. Since the merger process is now complete, regular editors can now edit it as normal (including removing, moving, and trimming) if it's the best course for this article. Ping @Rhododendrites: since they were the only merger voter and may have had other ideas about how it was supposed to be merged. AIRcorn (talk) 08:54, 22 April 2016 (UTC) @AIRcorn: Thanks for pingng and for a to merge. My adds selectively together is based on the since the nominated article used several reliable sources, but that it was a duplicate in the first place, and also like a I'm perfectly content to make you and/or other editors more familiar with this page to make the call about how it merges. Since the AfD was almost a year ago, I don't quite remember what, if anything, jumped out as a merger, so I have no strong feelings. — Rhododendrites speaks \ 13:31, 22 April 2016 (UTC) The first time I read the page was when I made the merger so I wouldn't consider myself with this page. I'm just working through a backlog at aid. In my opinion, the section I just merged doesn't improve this article, which I think is an unintended or at least unrealized result of some mergers. Will respond to your talk page in more detail about merger votes in general.
